

Food Ethics Council

Community Offerings

How can the Food Ethics Council, a small, remote think-tank, ally with and support on-the-ground, community-led food projects? We can:

- ★ Amplify voices from the community via our blog, case studies, press releases and via access to guest columns in The Grocer.
- ★ Publicise projects, events, outputs via our social media channels (14k followers on Twitter, 3k on LinkedIn) and newsletter (2k subscribers).
- ★ Connect the architects with other projects and movements around the UK. We have links in London, Northern Ireland, Edinburgh, Bristol and west Wales. We are also well connected to several big food and social justice NGOs/ CSOs.
- ★ Collate, synthesise and share learnings from similar community-led food projects around the UK. We have experience gathering knowledge from the ground and creating toolkits and resources.
- ★ Bridge gaps between communities and other groups such as businesses and policy-makers. We have experience engaging businesses, writing business briefs and policy briefs, and responding to policy consultations.
- ★ Facilitate spaces, discussions and workshops both online and in person. We are experienced facilitators - a big part of our work is holding space for people to come together and learn from each-other. We are keen to be more experimental here, such as facilitating co-creation workshops.
- ★ Share our knowledge with the community. We have lots of resources on food citizenship, and 10+ years experience in engaging business. Individually, our staff and Council have a very broad range of knowledge, from setting up community greengrocers to decolonising public health. We are happy to chat!
- ★ Help to untangle the complexity of the food system and illuminate people's individual power. We understand how overwhelming the system is - we also believe in people power. We zoom out and look at the food system as a whole, and can help community projects to find their place within this.
